"So easy to use!"

At our district-wide Battle of the Books event, finding a fair way to run the trivia contest between three schools has been a challenge. The Me First Buzzers have totally solved our issue! I highly recommend these buzzers.

Tisaac in Troy MI

Buzzers for small groups

Don't worry about competitive groups claiming that their buzzer sounded first. The Me First! Four-Player Set removes all the guesswork and determines unequivocally who buzzed in fastest - the one that did shows up green. It's that simple! Plus, the facilitator remote includes sound effects for the right and wrong answer.

FIDGET to FOCUS

Mastermind memorable moments!

Fidget toys, a.k.a. "Fiddles," serve a myriad of training needs. They may strike you as frivolous accessories, but consider their benefits and uses:

- 1. Engage "floating attention" we're wired to be easily distracted (to protect us from predators)
- 2. Promote a relaxed, playful mindset set a creative, friendly tone in your class.
- 3. Improve focus kinesthetic learners will focus better and absorb your material more quickly if they have something to do with their hands.
- 4. Relieve stress playing with toys and hand-held manipulatives is shown to
- 5. Engage the whole brain big picture, little picture, emotional, visual and tactile.
- 6. Metaphorically relate learning topics to a fidget toy, to make the memory stickier.

TeamWriter™ requires great coordination!

Challenge teams to draw a shape or write a phrase that's legible. Success requires communication and planning - What will be written? Where should the strings be attached? Where's the top of the page? How can the pen be guided precisely? How do teams "get on the same page"? This simple exercise lends itself to a rich debrief. Incudes facilitation notes and marker.

A team challenge for innovation and prototyping

This popular team building experience challenges groups to build the tallest possible free-standing structure, which will support one marshmallow on the top, using only 20 sticks of spaghetti, one yard of tape and one yard of string. Get all the parts in one convenient kit!

Discover the value of different perspectives

Improve communication and explore the value of differing points of view as groups try to accurately re-create block structures based on a series of photographs taken from different angles. Each kit includes 50 blocks, 25 photos and instructions for 5 easy-to-expert challenges. For groups of 6-30 participants.

Blocked Perspective C. #GAMEBLP $75.00

Practice problem solving and communication

For this energizing experience, give each participant one short length of half pipe and challenge the group to deliver the ball of your choice down the pipes from the starting point to the finish line. Success requires communication, creativity and teamwork. Includes 12 pipes, 3 balls and facilitation notes.

BRAIN SCIENCE AT WORK

(psst, save these pages)

We're often asked if these creative, brain-based learning techniques work. We think so but try it yourself. Complete the worksheet on page 21, then see how many of the 6 brain-science principles you remember.

Brain research focusing on learning and memory continues to deepen. The research is so voluminous now that we've synthesized the key findings and assembled dozens of ideas to help make your training more innovative, effective, and fun.

GREATER ENGAGEMENT → DEEPER LEARNING

The more areas of the brain you involve in learning, the more memorable it becomes. To engage more senses, think of TAMMIE...

- 1. Touch activate learners' tactile sense with fidget toys and writing.
- Aromas scents and smells can keep participants engaged and alert. Plus, they'll trigger memories down the road.
- 3. Movement incorporate physical movement of any kind. Walking at least 10 paces sends 15% more oxygen to the brain after 1 minute.
- 4. Music not only is music engaging and memorable, but it can act as a memory trigger.
- Images utilize all sorts of visual images from photos, icons, and pictures, to illustrations and drawings.
- Emotions stories, competitive games, and strong feelings will help participants stay focused and remember what they experienced.

A cohort of students taught using interactive engagement methods scored 19% higher than those who had a very highly rated traditional lecturer.

~Louis Deslauriers and Carl Wieman, Physics Education Research, 2011

Subjects given a doodling task while listening to a dull phone message had a 29% improved recall compared to nondoodling counterparts.

~Applied Cognitive Psychology, 2009

BETTER FOCUS → MORE KNOWLEDGE

Anyone who has sat through a presentation recently knows it's hard to stay focused for more than 10-20 mins. To improve focus, try these tips:

- 7. Keep it short. Break 40-minute segments into two 20-minute sessions.
- 8. Change-it-up. Alter teaching methods frequently. Add an activity, game, group challenge, or pair-and-share. Go off-topic for quick asides.
- Doodle. Besides the fact that doodling requires movement, it can also enhance memory.
- 10. Take a hike. To increase blood flow, have learners stand up to discuss questions. Or, ask them to write an answer on their own, then stand and walk at least 10 paces to find a discussion partner.
- 11. Shush! Avoid lectures. Let class participants do the talking and teaching.
- 12. Pause. Give learners time to consider new information and store it along with something they already know.
- 13. Practice. Increase the amount of time and ways in which students engage with the material.

MEMORY HACKS → LONGER RETENTION

Unless we work really hard at remembering something through focus, practice, and repetition, we're likely to forget as quickly as one-day or even-one hour after learning it. Heck, haven't we all forgotten people's names within moments of learning them?

Memory hacks work because they make us focus on new information, process it, then consciously store it in our brains. To supercharge your group's memory, have them try on these creative personas:

Meta-analysis of 19 reinforcement theory studies revealed an average effect of recognition on performance improvement of 15%.

~Stajkovic and Luthans, 1997

- 14. Pen Pal: Writing is a kinesthetic activity that helps us remember. Ask learners to "write this down," use worksheets, or highlight key learning points.
- 15. Drama Queen: Have participants create and share a story which dramatizes a key learning point.
- 16. Whiz Kid: Create a mnemonic where each letter stands for a key concept, like TAMMIE on page 32 or "every good boy does fine" (to remember musical notes E, G, B, D, F).
- 17. Song writer: Challenge groups to make up a jingle to jog their memory.
- 18. Artist: Draw an icon or choose a striking visual image that represents a key point.

GOOD HORMONES → BETTER BRAIN ACTIVITY

My 9th grade biology teacher said "if you don't know an answer, guess "hormones." Hormones is the right answer here too. Simply, endorphins are the hormones that promote feelings of euphoria and stimulate our frontal lobes (the part of our brain responsible for learning).

Cortisol, is the hormone that inhibits memory and attention. It is released into our bloodstream when we're under stress.

To Enhance Endorphins:

- Inspire laughter with jokes or silliness.
 Laughter reduces at least four of neuroendocrine hormones including cortisol.
- 20. Create Warm Welcomes: Make learners feel welcome. Say hello to participants by name.
- 21. Praise effort, not success: Make everyone feel capable and respected.
- 22. Say their names: Address participants personally. Refer to previous contributors to show you value their input.

To Crush Cortisol:

- Work in teams. Minimize stress by having participants work together. Don't put individuals on the spot.
- 24. Celebrate mistakes. If people think mistakes will yield judgment or criticism, they'll withdraw and resist making mistakes.
